One of the most interesting facets of Photoshop is how easy it is to create a unique style. While Photoshop has often been referred to as a "non-creative" tool, anyone who has used it can tell you that this is nonsense. This article will give you a chance to experiment with Photoshop without overloading yourself with all the other necessary tools.

1. Make an exact copy of an image: Create an exact copy of an image by dragging the box over the image and right clicking with the mouse (or perform these steps in the Photoshop menu). Name the copy the same as the original:
2. Create your own content: After you have created a copy of an image, you can go to menu > Edit > Content-Aware fill and then click on the box to outline the image. The fill tool will be active, and you can click in any area of the image to have the fill tool determine what color is behind the highlighted area. Once complete, crop the image to where the fill tool is still active. You will have your own custom content.
3. Apply effects: You can apply some basic effects to your image. Choose Edit > Filter > Blur > Gaussian blur (or some number of pixels). The blur tool will be active, and you can adjust the amount of blur by simply moving the mouse over the box. You can also apply blur to a layer. Choose Layer > Layer Mask > Blur (or some number of pixels) and then move the mouse over the selected layer to adjust the amount of blur.
4. Apply a tint and burn: Apply a tint and burn to a copy of an image. This is a good way to get started with some basic effects. Choose Edit > Desaturate, and then choose Color > Tint. Choose between Negative and Positive (keep the Negative selected), and then move the slider to the left or right. You can also use these effects on a layer by choosing Layer > Layer Mask > Tint (or Color > Tint). Move the mouse over the selected layer and adjust the Amount and Opacity.
5. Create a new layer: After you have applied effects, you can use a layer (choose New > Layer) to create a new layer. The layer you create will be used for Eight summers ago, a medical marijuana initiative opened the door to legal medical cannabis in Ohio, setting the stage for a national trend. While it's still a world away from gaining national approval, the Buckeye State was a pioneer. And it's now in jeopardy. Over the summer, the Ohio State Senate tabled two bills that would have expanded the use of medical cannabis in the state. Now, lawmakers plan to bring back the legislation, called the "Ohio Adopt a Patient Act," to the floor of the Ohio House. Josh Mansur, the Ohio Director for the Marijuana Policy Project, told NBC4 he thinks it's a simple political calculation. "I don't think they want to let medical marijuana die," Mansur said. "They recognize that the majority of people in Ohio support medical marijuana. And so they're seeing a broad political strategy to make sure that medical marijuana is not just dead in the state of Ohio but that it's very, very dead." Opponents of medical marijuana have said they know the Ohio Senate wants the bill to pass this year. The Senate passed a bill in June that called for full legalization, but the Senate president blocked the bill's progression. A second bill that would have created a new medical marijuana program to allow patient-growers was never taken up in committee. "We've seen that not one Democrat in the House has taken a position for or against a medical marijuana expansion," Mansur said. "So for Senate Republicans, it's a question of, is this something that will help them in the future, or will it hurt them in the future?" And some of Ohio's most powerful political forces are urging to design and make his own clothes. Each season, the Prince has a theme for his wardrobe: e.g. purple was the royal theme for the prince's first wedding. It was also announced on 18 May 2009 that Prince Charles would be designing a range of clothes for the clothing brand, Hush Puppies. The range will be released in early 2010, and includes wellington boots and loafers as well as shirts, trousers and accessories. Religion Charles is an Anglican practising monarchist (or, more precisely, Presbyterian),^[3] who has been the Chair of the Church Commissioners since 2010. He attends the Palace Chapel, in a ceremony with the current Queen Elizabeth II, at the Palace of Westminster. He takes the role of Heraldic Visitor to his four former counties of Wales (Montgomeryshire, Radnor, Brecknockshire and Cardiganshire) and his three current counties of Scotland (Roxburgh, Selkirkshire, and Peebles). With the inauguration of his second son, Prince Harry, as the Duke of Sussex in 2018, Charles became the monarch's first grandson. He was a regular churchgoer for many years, while the Queen was often criticised by a number of evangelical Christians for not being more devout, despite her reputation for regular church-going. However, he often accompanied his sons to church with his sons when they accompanied his mother on her church visits. The Prince of Wales has been an ardent supporter of the Church of England and supported the establishment of the Church for England and Wales in the United Kingdom. He is seen as a "cultural Anglican",^[4] sitting at the head of his family at the Queen's funeral service at Westminster Abbey in 2013, and reading the Archbishop of Canterbury's sermon at her state funeral in 2018. He is also a member of the exclusive Anglican congregation in Rome known as the Holy Communion and Reunion. He is a member of the royal family who regularly attends Anglican Holy Communion services with the rest of the family. He has regularly attended the ordination of bishops. He is involved in pastoral care in the royal Household, and invited Anglican clergy to his country residence, Highgrove, in order to lead services and to visit with his family, but not actually sit with the family in church. He has also been offered the position of Steward of the Choristers of King's College Chapel, Cambridge. The Prince of Wales has been described as a
