DESKTOP 11 32 BITS N' PRECISION AVAILABLEThe impact of socio-economic, environmental and vegetation characteristics on sediment quality in coastal areas of Poyan Lagoon, Turkey. Sediment and water quality of two adjacent coastal areas (from Gürpınar to Yenişehir and from Zirili to Emirdağ) situated in Poyan Lagoon were determined in order to assess the impacts of socio-economic, environmental and vegetation characteristics. Sampling was done during two seasons (dry and rainy). The sediment composition is dominated by carbonaceous materials and silts. The grain size distribution is unimodal in the wet season and polymodal in the dry season. The mean contents of total petroleum hydrocarbons (TPH) and total PAHs are 96.5 and 25.2 microg kg(-1), respectively. Zirili and Emirdağ are mostly influenced by the Gürpınar Zone Stream Drainage (GZSD) which includes the Zirili Stream, outflow of Eski Keçili Lake, irrigation runoff, and extreme water influx from Derece River in spring flood periods. The peak concentration of TPH, PAHs and surfactant occurred in July and August. Salinity and DO are major environmental parameters which significantly influence the sediment water quality and conditions in Poyan Lagoon. Salinity and surface water area are the dominant factors for the presence of TPH in the lagoon. The 3da54e8ca3
