MY LOVE of AD&D hasn't really diminished with the new releases that came out over the past 15 years--I quite enjoy the adventure and role-playing elements-- but when I go to a table and people are moving into other campaigns set in the same world, with the same characters or else under the influence of the same gaming mechanic, I always wonder if they aren't being a bit hypocritical by making claims that the system is superior to other games. Personally, I'm a huge fan of Paizo and they haven't released a rule-set that I don't love, but I'm quite certain that I don't love it as much as some of the other games that I've played over the years. As much of a fan as I am of Paizo's games, I always feel like the system which offers the most freedom is the one that I enjoy the most. Imagine how different Pathfinder might be if the rules for character creation, skill progression, and spell design weren't tied up in role-playing simulation and instead simply allowed me to use an 'any means any way' sort of approach.
