Plasma fibronectin (FN) is a multifunctional glycoprotein whose high levels in plasma are associated with the adherence of bacteria to endothelial cells and to tissue matrices. Using synthetic peptides of its type III connecting segment, we have demonstrated that the 40-amino-acid-residue repeat region is recognized by an anti-FN monoclonal antibody, MF7, raised against a synthetic peptide containing the cyanogen bromide-derived amino acid sequence FN3(117-134) in the rat. It has been found that the type III connecting segment peptides but not the FN3(117-134) peptide can bind to gelatin-affinized surfaces via the type III connecting segments. Furthermore, it has been observed that the type III connecting segment peptides can be incorporated into fibrillar collagen matrices as revealed by electron microscopy. Using a cyanogen brom

In the jungle, King Louie the Lowland Bully rules a city of happy, innocent animals. And he lives with them in a happy, perfect city-just like you and me. This is how it is until other mean animals-called "our kind" come and attack. We can't move forward until we move back. That's why we took back our forest and destroyed the evil forest where King Louie lived. And once we created a City of Peace, we created the new King Louie. And he's the bad guy.
