The Supreme Court on Monday rejected the request of a former judge of the Nigerian Bar Association (NBA) and his nephew for an order of protection against a top justice of the Supreme Court, Justice James Tandja Duma. Justice Duma, in a written ruling, dated October 31, 2017, has ordered Justice Fatai Owoseni, the chairman of the NBA, to pay the sum of N1.3 billion to a company, Aga Galadima, allegedly with the latter's nephew, Ishar Tola. Duma said the NBA, at the apex of the Nigerian Bar Association, issued two irrevocable letters of indemnity dated September 15, 2017 and November 14, 2017, to an un-named company. The Justice had also refused to accede to Owoseni's request for an order of protection against Justice Duma, who was also one of the Governors that nominated him. In his ruling, Justice Duma said the NBA was a registered body in Nigeria, having been registered by the National Board of Legal Education. Justice Duma said the NBA insisted that the indemnity letters were not signed by it, as required. He said that since the NBA's letters of indemnity are fraudulent, Owoseni and Tola had every reason to seek protection from the courts. According to the pro-section, Justice Duma had also served a notice of motion to the Secretary General of the NBA seeking an order that the NBA company issued the letters of indemnity be deemed null and void. "Therefore, I hereby dismiss the demand for an order of protection filed by the Respondents and orders the Petitioners to pay to the Petitioners his costs and expenses incurred in the proceedings." "I also want the Petititioners to pay the costs of $5000 to the Petitioners' solicitors, where the services of the Petitioners' solicitors were used in the proceedings." The NBA, later in a statement by its spokesperson, John Ohema, quoted the lawyer for Owoseni, Barr. Osaze Chukwuka, as saying, "They (NBA) are convinced that we (Ishar Tola) have every right to be served with the petition and that, therefore, we should be allowed access to the court." "We are not begging to the court. We are
