Photoshop CC 2015.5 Download link (40 GB P2P) . Just as the rich get richer, the poor get poorer. That's the finding of a new survey. Nearly one in five Americans -- 17 percent -- are living in poverty, according to Gallup. But the definition of poverty has changed. The Census Bureau is changing the measure, from the current $11,840 a year for a family of four or $24,840 a year for a family of six, to $23,021 a year. That's well below the government's 2013 poverty guidelines for a family of four -- $24,310 -- and the 2013 poverty guidelines for a family of six -- $27,150. The federal poverty level for a family of four is lower than it has been in two decades. It's even lower than it was when President Obama took office. The Census Bureau's poverty level is now at $19,072, down from a high of $23,750 in 1999. Now, all families have the same income limit of $23,021. That's more than double the $11,840 that it used to be. The government's poverty threshold is the official definition of poverty. Experts say what's more important is how much you make in relation to that definition. "The Census Bureau doesn't know how many people can barely scrape by by it, but it does know how many people are sliding down and falling off the cliff into poverty," said Robert Rector, an expert on poverty at the conservative Heritage Foundation. -- CNN's Jill Dougherty contributed to this report.
