However, because of the United States arms embargo against the Soviet Union, the order was cancelled and the keel was laid down on 8 June 1946 as HMS Toulinguet. She was transferred to the Royal Navy before being completed on 16 December 1947. Design and description The Type 12E was initially ordered by the US Navy as an escort carrier, but cancelled in the summer of 1945 due to the end of the Second World War. The keel for the ship was laid down on 8 June 1946 at the Portsmouth Naval Shipyard as HMS Toulinguet, but it was never completed. As built, Toulinguet was long with a beam of and a draft of. The ship displaced and was armed with eight 4-inch (102 mm) Mark XVI dual purpose guns in four twin mounts, along with eight single 40 mm anti-aircraft guns in single hull. The ship had a crew of 870. She was originally planned to be equipped with a new type of radar, but when this was cancelled, the ship was completed as a conventional escort carrier. As completed, she was given the pennant number F8029. Fate Toulinguet was scrapped at Blyth.
